Windows 8 Release date November 22, 2009 Microsoft announced the Windows 8 operating system on October 18, 2008. The system was immediately released to manufacturing in January 2009 and shipped worldwide on October 26, 2009, the day its retail availability began. Its name changes reflect the multiple versions of Windows and Windows Server that it includes, in addition to Windows Server 8. This is a significant upgrade to the former Windows XP operating system that requires a completely new user interface and platform, such as new applications and higher hardware requirements. The Windows 8 operating system is a major upgrade to the Windows 7, the most recent version of the operating system. Windows Vista is not included, though certain features of Windows Vista are incorporated into the Windows 7 Starter and Windows 7 Home Basic editions. Windows 8 integrates the Windows Live services, and includes the new Metro-style user interface, while improving its reliability and productivity features. Windows 8 allows IT administrators to assign explicit permissions and access to individual Windows 8 users and Microsoft Office applications. Unlike previous versions of Windows, Windows 8 is not compatible with devices and applications that were designed for or originally supported by previous versions of the operating system. Only the Windows Store apps are available for previous Windows applications, including Windows Media Player, Windows Movie Maker, and other Windows Media technology applications. To provide backwards compatibility with previous Windows software, Windows 8 includes a new application that lets Windows users run Windows Vista and earlier programs, though it is only available to users with certain editions of the Microsoft Windows Home, Professional and Ultimate licenses.
