Pay attention to the extra controls at the bottom of the user interface At the bottom of the Photoshop user interface is a menu bar at the bottom of your screen, illustrated in Figure 3-6. In addition to features you should be familiar with, such as the Edit menu, the Layers panel, and the Image Tracer, Photoshop provides you with more features that are unique to the newest version. FIGURE 3-6: Top, the menu bar; bottom, the shortcut menu. The first feature is Layer Comp, which lets you combine multiple layers into one; any layers you create can be combined with other layers or merged into one. Layers you've created can be grouped by Layer Type in the Layers Panel so you can easily apply effects, filters, and other editing techniques to them. The Layer menu also provides a number of tools to allow you to select, move, copy, delete, lock, and unlock layers. And the Layers Panel provides you with a simple way to manage your layers. (You can find out about the Layers Panel in the next section.) Other Layer tools include * Layer menu: The Layer menu provides you with a number of tools to manipulate layer content. These tools let you * Align the object or the image * Flip, rotate, mirror, and crop an image * Rotate an image clockwise or counterclockwise * Resize an image in a specified percentage of its width and height * Rotate, flip, or crop an image * Flatten and re-flatten a multilayered image * Rotate, distort, delete, reposition, move, and adjust the layer's opacity (see the next bullet point) You can easily define what part of an image you want to change by using the Layers Panel. For example, if you want to make a quick thumbnail for an image on your computer, you can simply use the Selection tool to highlight the part of the image that you want to keep and then press the Delete key. You also can use the Layer menu to * Convert a raster image to an editable (vector) image that can be easily

The present invention relates to a data transfer control device and its control method in a data communication system, and more particularly to a data transfer control device and its control method in a data communication system which employs the method of data transfer adapted to the Gbit Ethernet (registered trademark). A data transfer control device and its control method in a data communication system which employs the method of data transfer adapted to the Gbit Ethernet (registered trademark) are disclosed in Japanese patent application No. 2000-218897, for example. This data communication system employs the method of data transfer adapted to the Gbit Ethernet (registered trademark). The data communication system comprises a sending device and a receiving device. The sending device comprises a sending controller for controlling a sending operation from the sending device to the receiving device, a sending interface for carrying the method of data transfer adapted to the Gbit Ethernet (registered trademark) between the sending device and the receiving device and the sending controller, and a sending module for carrying out the sending operation with the sending interface in the sending controller. The receiving device comprises a receiving controller for controlling a receiving operation from the sending device to the receiving device, a receiving interface for carrying the method of data transfer adapted to the Gbit Ethernet (registered trademark) between the sending device and the receiving device and the receiving controller, and a receiving module for carrying out the receiving operation with the receiving interface in the receiving controller. The data communication system carries out a data communication between the sending device and the receiving device by the method of data transfer adapted to the Gbit Ethernet (registered trademark) to transfer the data between the sending device and the receiving device. However, the above-mentioned data communication system has the following problems. When the sending device releases and disconnects the method of data transfer adapted to the Gbit Ethernet (registered trademark), it is required to fetch the receiving data from the receiving device and then release and disconnect the method of data transfer adapted to the Gbit Ethernet (registered trademark). Specifically, for example, the receiving data is fetched from the receiving device before releasing and disconnecting the method of data transfer adapted to the Gbit Ethernet (registered trademark). Or, the sending data is fetched from the sending device before disconnecting the method of data transfer adapted to the Gbit Ethernet (registered trademark). In these cases, the receiving data is fetched from the receiving device while the receiving device is in a communication standby state. Therefore, when the sending device releases and disconnects the method of data transfer adapted to the Gbit Ethernet

The Pen tool makes it easy to draw lines and round points on both images and the canvas. The rectangle tool lets you draw a box. The Gradient tool lets you create, modify, and change the color gradient for an image. There are two types of gradients: Linear and Radial. The Magic Wand tool quickly selects a particular area of an image, or allows you to select multiple areas of an image at once. The Pen Select tool is used to select an object or area of an image, allowing you to resize or move the selection. You can also modify the selection's properties, like opacity or gradient. The Crop tool lets you resize a specific area of an image without changing the original pixels. The Dodge tool lets you lighten or darken an area of an image. You can also change the intensity of the effect using the Opacity slider. The Burn tool is used to remove an object from an image. The Rectangular Marquee tool lets you select an area of an image to include or exclude from your editing. The Free Select tool lets you click and drag to select an area of an image. The Path Selection tool is used to select an area of an image. You can use various options to modify the selection. The Tint tool is used to add color to an image. The Mirror tool is used to flip an image on its side, causing the canvas to be mirrored around a horizontal or vertical line that's
