Epson TI-56 Wi-Fi Printer Troubleshooting Epson . Interleukin-6 and tumor necrosis factor- $\alpha$ : development of therapeutic strategies using caspase inhibitors in multiple sclerosis. Multiple sclerosis is an immune-mediated demyelinating disease of the central nervous system. Th1 cytokines such as interleukin-12 (IL-12) have been shown to promote disease in experimental autoimmune encephalomyelitis (EAE) and are also implicated in the pathogenesis of human multiple sclerosis. IL-12 is a heterodimeric cytokine composed of the p40 and p35 subunits that act on T cells to stimulate the production of interferon- $\gamma$  (IFN- $\gamma$ ). IL-12 also induces a Th17 response that results in the production of IL-17. The Th17 response has been observed in both human and animal models of EAE. Other interleukins such as IL-6 are also associated with the pathogenesis of multiple sclerosis. IL-6 is a 27-kDa cytokine that belongs to the gp130 cytokine family and has a broad range of biological activities, including the ability to stimulate the development of Th17 cells. It is also known to be a major mediator of the production of auto-antibodies in immune-related diseases and is critical for lymphoid development and differentiation. Tumor necrosis factor- $\alpha$  (TNF- $\alpha$ ) is a 17-kDa ligand that binds to the p60 receptor, also known as TNF receptor 1, and is well known for its proinflammatory activities. Both TNF- $\alpha$  and IL-6 induce autoimmune responses and are produced by activated macrophages and microglia in the central nervous system during the induction and progression of EAE. In this review, the role of IL-6 and TNF- $\alpha$  in MS and EAE is summarized with reference to the possible role of caspases in the production and actions of IL-6 and TNF- $\alpha$ . The development of therapeutic strategies using caspase inhibitors is also discussed. Georges Poulet - Drunk Women An album review by Jamie Morton 4 Songs "Drunk Women," "Gonna Blow
