What's new in Fifa 22:

- Realism

FIFA 22 introduces HyperMotion Technology, that uses a diverse set of player data from real-life gameplay, to deliver a more authentic and interactive version of gameplay. The sensor in your gear is now powered by the engine, creating smarter feedback and information. The dynamic weather and night time has been enhanced, creating an even more vivid presentation of the game.

- Off the ball intelligence

Off the ball behaviours in the engine (like catching, running or diving) and on the touchlines (like a crosser) have been improved and are now more reactive to the behaviour of opposing players. We've also expanded the agent intelligence to include unit and player collision, quickly adapting to situations without overstepping its parameters.

- Off the ball behaviour and improvements

The off the ball behaviours for midfielders have been improved, with passing no longer failing to go forward by random chance. Pass receivers now remember the pass they receive on their deflected ball, creating smoother gameplay. This applies to midfielders in possession of the ball, but it also works for defenders that lose the ball, recovering the ball to feet rather than by the defender's chest.

- The moment of impact

When a header is scored, the ball is placed in the net at the moment of impact. This improves the recognisability of the goal and changes the point at which scoring an own goal is awarded.

- Leaderboards and leader list

The Leaderboards and leader list will be more relevant and meaningful in FIFA 22. This will provide ultimate fan-favourite moments like Messi's Mega-Grandslam and Ronaldo's Treble, where the most accomplished players in their region are in the running in their respective cups.

Individual Player Matches

The feature will combine existing FIFA Matchday and FIFA Ultimate Team individual player Matches into one seamless experience in FIFA 22. Players will be ranked according to the new Weighted Metric System. Players will be ranked based on overall, regular
