When I went to AKC, the vet recommended we do a "vibroacoustic therapy" (she said it would act as a "spring") to help the "additional" joint. I did it for a week, and it helped quite a bit. Now that I've been playing for years, it's not a factor. From my perspective, the occasional joint "flare-up" is normal and to be expected. Have you had a full veterinary exam for all your joints, muscles and bones? I think "a healthy animal is worth a healthy amount of aggravation"1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to mirror assemblies and more particularly to mirror assemblies for use in motor vehicles. 2. Description of the Prior Art Assemblies of the type referred to have heretofore commonly had to be carried in a secure manner to prevent its loss. Its easy accessibility from the passenger compartment would increase the likelihood of loss. Hence, the assembly was mounted at a location remote from the access side of the passenger compartment. Assemblies of this type while having been somewhat simplified in design and improved in some respects, have been correspondingly made more expensive. Furthermore, in certain cases parts of the assembly which make up a part of the entire assembly were actually carried in the assembly itself. This in turn resulted in relatively high manufacturing cost. The assembly would also be relatively awkward in design for use 648931e174
