It was working fine before there was a system crash and a restore, but now my user view on a doc is always disabled. I can see that there is a file by name, but the user is unable to open it. The problem is that I cannot force him to select a file, as he thinks that all is fine and he can access the doc without any problem. I checked that the permissions are ok for the file, as well as the owner, so that's not the problem. How can I let the user open the file by clicking on it before he can even select it? Here are some parts of the code in which the crash happened: EditPaste.TheDocument = myDoc; A: The problem was the check for a file name. In some cases, the name had a carriage return or a newline character. So I now check the file path and I have the same problem. If the document is on his desktop, I force him to choose a file. But I still can't force him to select a file before opening the document. If anyone else faces this problem, here is my solution: TextReader TR =

File.OpenText(FilePath); string line = null; while ((line = TR.ReadLine()) != null) { if (line.StartsWith("d:\\")) { FilePath = Directory.GetDirectoryRoot(line).FullName; return true; af5dca3d97
