A trial of counseling and condoms (COC) was performed in a rural community in South Africa where sexual HIV transmission is highly prevalent. Nine hundred and sixty-four women and their partners (960 serodiscordant) were enrolled in the study. At the end of the study, the overall COC rate was 96.9%. Higher adherence rates were correlated with higher education. The COC rate was higher in women who were married or cohabiting with their partner than in single women. Intentional abstainers were more likely to be unmarried, of lower educational level, and alcoholic. Education about protection of the male partner should be included in education programmes for single women. Special consideration may be required for single women and single women with partners of lower educational level. Q: Can user entered data be stored in Asp.Net form field?
