Open the Android phone and verify that your Bluetooth is turned on. If it is not, turn it on and then open the device manager and ensure that your device is listed under Bluetooth. If it is not, then go to your phone's settings menu, then the Bluetooth menu and ensure that the Bluetooth setting is set to ON. If it is not, select the Bluetooth option and ensure that it is set to ON. You can also try to pair your device with your car's Bluetooth. To do this, select the option that says "Next" and select the list of devices that is displayed. If your phone is not listed, then you need to contact your phone companies software development department to ensure that it is set up to work with your car bluetooth. It should also be noted that some phones (like the Samsung Nexus) require you to create a new connection to the car. The process is different for every phone.

There are numerous guides on the internet that could help. Some popular ones are here and here. Some phones also require a pin when pairing. The process is different for every phone. Once you have verified that the connectivity is working correctly, you can go ahead and power down the car and begin installing the software. To do this, press the power button on the top of your dashboard until the power icon turns grey. Press and hold the ignition button down for about 10 seconds and the PCM should power up, displaying the message "PCM Connected". Anyone who purchased a Mojang account in 2014 can re-download the game's source code. When the game's creator, Markus "Notch" Persson, announced the move on his blog, he said, "So the head of Mojang and I have decided that the source code of Minecraft will be available open-source. When the game goes EOL (End of Life) in 2020, the source code will be released under GPLv3. 5ec8ef588b
