

This building allows you to steal land from other players. You either place a Gift to someone, or you find another player's town by chance, all which require you to have a Gift. You can then move into the town and steal their land if you can. This costs 100 maintenance, 25 power and 500 tools. Players have a limit of 10 gifts, however there is no limit on how many times you can steal land if you have them. A Business Card is a special building that allows someone to deal with someone within the game. When dealing with another player the business card provides a random description, and a random low level building of the type the player is seeking. The building is completely random, and can include all buildings which may be useful. The business card can only be used on another player, and then only once. So, a player can find other players by searching the map, but once found the player cannot switch away from the other player. This can be used in unique ways, for instance; the Matriarch could send another player a Business Card to see what is in their tavern, and add them to their spouse list if there is one. Construction is a blast. You build everything from scratch, and you always have endless resources to do it with. In the Anno world, factions drop resources and also share the trade net. If you harvest a resource, you need to put it to some good use. Farmers gather the resources into a warehouse so that you can trade with other factions for the resource (or request a trade through your connection manager). Making a little colony means you can gather resources, grow a city, explore the world, and keep your population alive and well.
