The game featured a number of enhancements to the tabletop version, including more levels, the ability to play against the computer, an "off" setting, and the ability to compete in time trials. The game was well received by critics and was the best selling video game of the year in New Zealand and Australia. A sequel, Dodgeball: The Streets was released in 1996, as well as several conversions to other platforms such as Sega Saturn, PlayStation, and Macintosh. Gameplay The Dodgeball: The Game is an isometric, two-dimensional version of Dodgeball, and the sequel, Dodgeball: The Streets. It was developed by Vib-O-Matic, and was published by Mindfield Interactive. It was released in arcades and came in two different models: the Arcade model was a brightly-colored solid machine, while the Supermodel was a chrome-and-stainless-steel machine with a pull-out booklet of rules and other game information
