(GDtZn) and more then 35 strains from the genus Zygomycetes (1). The new species was selected for its pleomorphism and its unique character at the GSS sequence. This new phylogenetic information on strains from the genus Zygomycetes will contribute to improve methods and techniques used to identify these strains and to help in assigning species to genera within the order Mucorales. This research was also supported by the European Commission (EUROFUN project EMTRA-3000), BBSRC and NSF-USA.Q: Audio recording in different thread I have a video recording application, where I have a AsyncTask subclass, which plays back the recorded video. However, what I actually need is to write the audio from the microphone. The normal way for doing this is to play a short recording of 4 or 8 seconds and then save the microphone input to a file. (So an A-B switch type setup: use the microphone for 4 or 8 seconds, then use the file when finished.) Now, I tried to use a Handler to post an Runnable each time I got a 4 or 8 second fragment of audio. This works if I just let the runnable continue to be executed by the main thread (and not destroy it), but I would actually need to destroy the Runnable when the thread finishes playing the audio, to avoid leaking memory. As I need to do something similar to this task (which I read about but couldn't find a tutorial on it) I just wanted to ask if this is how it's done, and whether you've got a better (safer) solution to the problem. Thanks! A: The message processing comes with a cost. A (good) solution would be to
