The problem was as follows: Suppose that you are going to be a successful company and you are going to be releasing a framework. Now a competitor comes up with a new technology and you want to try and anticipate their invention. In order to do this, you want to delay the release of the framework by one year. Is this possible? Any advice on how to delay a framework release? A: No, it's not possible and there is no need to release a new framework version with the intention of 'being ahead' of the competition. I'm not a Java developer but it's pretty much a standard C# construct to delay compilation of a new assembly with the same name and version as the assembly that is currently installed on the client's computer. There are lots of articles available to help with this type of thing. In fact I would advise against delaying your release of an existing framework, I see no advantage to this. Austrian Customs Tariffs With around 75 million travellers and 9.5 million cars travelling to and from Austria annually, it's clear that the nation is a key gateway to Western Europe and, by extension, to the rest of the world. As such, it is important to help travellers understand the practicalities of Austro-European Customs. As at 25th June 2017, the current customs tariffs for the following are now in place, as set out in the Customs Regulations for Goods, Fiscal Terms and Tariff Rules (KGT) as
